

Dublin tech player Triangle to create 20 new jobs

New jobs at Triangle being driven by accelerated growth in its managed service business.

Irish technology company Triangle is creating in excess of 20 new jobs in Dublin.

Ten of these positions have been filled with a further 10 or more to be filled by March.

The new positions include service architects, service managers, Level 2 and 3 technical support personnel and business development executives.

Triangle is one of Ireland's leading independent IT service organisations with a proven track record and long standing customer relationships built on innovation and trust.

Leveraging market leading technologies from some of the world's largest vendors Triangle delivers solutions to drive capability within enterprise IT in support of clear operational goals.

Triangle invests jingle jangle in growth

Triangle, through organic growth and acquisition, has grown strongly in key areas including security and cloud – public and private – to help modernise their customers' operations.

Demand for its specialised skills has led to the expansion of its managed service business, said Triangle's Services director Miriam Byrne.

"Business has been strong overall but our managed service business has experienced 100pc growth in the last year.

"We are seeing significant demand for specialised managed service in critical areas within enterprise environments across all sectors we operate in.

"Highly skilled people within our managed service teams working closely with our customers' IT teams are replacing the more traditional broad outsourcing agreements that were in vogue over the past 10 years. This brings the benefit of expertise and innovation while facilitating agility and ownership within our customers' businesses."
